A Pocket Guide to ICE in Kentucky

- Many individuals and organizations across the state have come together to create, translate, and distribute this guide.
- It is designed to be adaptable, versatile, and accessible for a wide range of audiences and scenarios across the state, including those directly impacted as well as those wanting to help.
- All of the information in this guide is public, and folks are encouraged to share widely to help raise awareness and preparedness.
- Access to clear, consistent information and resources is critical in crisis situations, and this guide is part of the effort to get that information out.

Recommended Uses:

1. Keep a copy on you to refer to in an emergency.
    a. You can call the hotlines on the back for guidance.
    b. Or give this to someone you come across who needs help finding resources.
2. Use it as a study guide
    a. Read it straight through for a digestible overview.
    b. Then go deeper with each resource over time, especially the We Have Rights videos (largest QR code).
3. Use as a supplement to support existing organizational trainings
    a. It's inexpensive to print.
    b. It's available in both English and Spanish.
    c. It can support an introductory training or more in-depth material.
4. Hold your own impromptu mini-trainings
    a. Go through it with one or more people at a time when the opportunity arises.
    b. Try watching the videos and practicing the scenarios together and then connecting what you learn with material in the guide.
    c. You don't have to be an expert. You're not giving advice. You're sharing information and resources.
5. Distribute through your trusted networks, organizations, congregations, local businesses, tabling events, and gathering places, and encourage those you share it with to do the same.
6. Organize folding parties!
    a. This is an easy-entry way for people to volunteer, learn more, and strengthen networks of concerned, caring people.
    b. You can add in a mini-training or just let discussion arise naturally.
7. Above all, let it raise all of our collective awareness and give visibility to the "Shadow Surge" happening across the country right now and how this relates to Kentucky.

Where to Download and What to Know About the Map

- Pocket Guides and folding instructions are available for download here: https://www.louisvillesurj.org/cdn-files.html
- 287g Task Force Model contracts are spreading across KY so fast that it won't be possible to keep a printed map of them totally up-to-date for long, but the map in the guide can help us begin to visualize what is happening
- Periodically, the guide will be updated and uploaded to reflect changes to the map. The other resources and information are expected to stay stable, however.
- There is no harm in keeping earlier versions of the guide in circulation because they are accurate by date and provide the guidance to see ice.gov/identify-and-arrest/287g for updates to the list of participating agencies.
